Questions for Organizations using Jenga as a Metaphor:

- How do our organizational goals and routines drive us inevitably towards more and more risk?
- What goals and routines can we introduce that will help us better monitor, adapt, and absorb the inherent risks of our programs?
- How can we seek out different views and angles to better understand where we may be unstable?
- How can we use our understanding of the whole system to decide where new growth or new risk is acceptable, or not?
- When failure occurs in your organization, do we seek to understand the underlying organizational causes, or do we blame the last person who touched it?
